12:00 PM	SCIENCE OF TREK - Why are there so many humanoids on Star Trek? An evolutionary perspective. Dr. Mohamed Noor, Professor of Biology and Dean of Natural Sciences at Duke University Have you ever wondered why most alien life depicted on Star Trek strongly resembles us Earthlings (besides the use of human actors)? Come explore the possibility of humanoid or other forms of life on other planets with Mohamed Noor, a Professor of Biology at Duke University and lifelong Trek fan. Drawing on relevant scenes from the series as well as real science, Noor presents evidence for the existence of a common ancestor for life on Earth, and clarifies misconceptions about evolutionary biology. He explains some basic evolutionary principles and uses these principles to evaluate three hypotheses posed in various Star Trek series for why there are so many humanoids. Come see which of the hypotheses is the most feasible, and learn a lot of evolution in the process!		CBS All Access Stage

Find out with the Executive Director of the Space, Cyber, and Telecom Law Program at the University of Nebraska as she teaches attendees a little international and domestic space law through the lens of classic Star Trek (with a little Next Generation thrown in).
10:30 AM		Star Trek's Biggest Unsolved Mysteries		Kelley Theatre
		Tyler Orton &amp; Cam Smith, Subspace Transmissions podcast

	From Capt. Ben Sisko's fate, to the galactic fallout from Romulas' destruction, to the identity of "Future Guy" in Enterprise, these lingering questions and more still fuel hearty debates among fans. But Star Trek: Discovery, the upcoming Star Trek: Picard series and the "What We Left Behind" DS9 documentary all seem to hold clues to some of the franchise's biggest unsolved mysteries. The hosts of the Subspace Transmissions podcast, Tyler Orton and Cam Smith, trace the origins of these storylines and offer insights into everything from Guinan's background to Tom Riker's time in Cardassian prison and more.
10:55 AM	Welcome with DROP ZONE!	Nimoy Theatre
11:00 AM	WARRIOR WOMEN OF STAR TREK Amy Imhoff, Dr. Erin MacDonald, Grace Moore, and Michelle Specht as well as actresses from the franchise as they discuss the warrior women of Star Trek. Fierce female characters have inspired Trek fans over 50 years, directly descended from a tradition steeped in mythology, theater, literature, and film. Bring your fighting spirit and celebrate powerful women of Trek!	Nimoy Theatre
11:00 AM	TEACHING WITH TREK - What Can We Learn from the Klingon Empire? Dr. Daniel Martin, Associate Professor, Korea Advanced Institute of Science and Technology (KAIST) The Star Trek franchise has frequently used stories about alien cultures as metaphors for issues in contemporary society. The proud Klingon species has been portrayed as both ally and adversary, appearing in every incarnation of Star Trek. What can the Klingons tell us about real-world issues? What historical events have influenced the evolving depiction of this honor bound society? This talk will suggest ways in which analysis of Klingon-centric episodes of Star Trek can effectively guide students - who may be unfamiliar with the franchise and have little knowledge of American history - through the ways the series engages with ideology, history and politics.	CBS All Access Stage
11:15 AM	INSIDE TREK - Star Trek Authors, Their Books &amp; Comics Mike Johnson, Writer, Star Trek Comics Chase Marotz, Editor, IDW Publishing John Jackson Miller, Author of "The Enterprise War" Robb Pearlman, Author of "Body by Starfleet" Ed Schlesinger, Senior Editor, Simon &amp; Schuster Meet the authors and editors that are expanding the Star Trek universe with new novels, comics and unique (and funny) views of Trek fandom. Hear about their favorite stories, writing Trek and the stories they really want to tell.	Kelley Theatre
11:45 AM	ROD RODDENBERRY &amp; TREVOR ROTH The name that started it all takes on genre entertainment in the current landscape and provides updates on many of its current projects.	Nimoy Theatre
12:00 PM	INSIDE TREK - Emergent Player Narratives in the Living Universe of Star Trek Fleet Command Steve Huff, Vice President of Product &amp; GM of Star Trek Fleet Command at Scopely Avery Sakamoto, Sr. Game Designer of Star Trek Fleet Command at Scopely Mike Johnson, Narrative Writer Hear from the creative minds behind mobile game Star Trek Fleet Command, the first free-roaming multiplayer Star Trek experience to combine RPG style progression and real-time battles. Based on the 2009, 2013 and 2016 cinematic Star Trek universe, learn how Scopely, with DIGIT Game Studios, adapted the Kelvin timeline into a unique narrative structure with missions, factions, live operations and more, empowering players to create their own stories and limitless gameplay experiences within the universe.	CBS All Access Stage
12:15 PM	TEACHING WITH TREK - Time Travel, Transporters and the Terran Universe: Philosophy and Star Trek Dr. Kenny Boyce, Assistant Professor of Philosophy, University of Missouri, Columbia Dr. Beth Seacord, Assistant Professor of Philosophy, College of Southern Nevada Dr. Rebecca Chan, Assistant Professor of Philosophy, California State University, San Jose The panelists will present some of the core philosophical issues raised by Trek. Is time travel inherently contradictory or is it metaphysically possible? Do transporters preserve the person transported or do they send a copy while destroying the original? How much like us are our counterparts in alternate universes? And what might we learn about ourselves from our counterparts?	Kelley Theatre

3:30 PM	TEACHING WITH TREK - "Eyes Open" - Teaching Critical Thinking and Critical Literacy with Star Trek Dr. Stefan "Steve" Rabitsch, Assistant Professor, University of Graz (Germany) Star Trek's world is ready-made for teaching fundamental critical thinking skills since it is fueled by a democratizing spirit and an allegorical intent. Immanuel Kant's imperative "sapere aude" (dare to know) has been a core tenet of Star Trek since its beginning. An excellent example of science fiction (sf), Star Trek comes with the basic building blocks of critical thinking already built-in. It provides us with an estranged vantage point to see our world and ourselves in it from a different imaginative angle which demands an imaginative, democratically enabling and, ultimately ennobling response. In my panel, I will showcase practical pedagogical approaches for how to effectively engage with Star Trek in class settings as well as specific examples drawn from the Star Trek corpus which I have repeatedly used as entry points to exemplify the basic tenets of critical thinking.	CBS All Access Stage

		Star Trek is a modern myth that explores the social, moral, and scientific issues of contemporary society. Joseph Campbell wrote that myths are the stories that answer the “big questions” in life. Mythic heroes struggle with those questions, make difficult choices, and demonstrate culturally that they are not alone on their Hero’s Journey. In this session Dr. Mc will explore how some of our favorite characters represent classic mythic archetypes. Who are the mentors, tricksters, mothers, and shadows in your favorite series?

2:00 PM	Star Trek &amp; NASA: Fifty Years of Inventing the Future Together Rick Sternbach	Kelley Theatre

	Even before NASA and Star Trek existed, filmmakers looked to the aeronautical industry, organizations involved in rocket experiments, and astronomers to aid them in depicting flights to other worlds. The practice continued with Star Trek, which first aired over 50 years ago, and barely eight years after NASA itself was formed. This presentation will examine many of the concepts developed for Star Trek, both human and alien, with particular emphasis on their scientific and technological plausibility, even in the 24 century. While the real world has been quickly catching up to what we have designed in the Star Trek universe, we continue to learn and ask questions. And imagine.
